The pervasiveness of sexual violence impacts all communities, with rates of highest victimization among the most vulnerable - including people with mental illness and/or substance abuse disorders. The emotional impact of sexual violence often also negatively impacts mental health and leads to substance abuse. Therefore, it is vital that mental health clinicians have a solid understanding of sexual violence, as well as basic knowledge of interventions for survivors sexual violence. In this course, we will discuss the dynamics of sexual violence, components of ethical interventions and strategies for primary prevention.
